Despite the E-learning implementation, another case happened to scholar students on the same scope research. Some students using internet just for fun and entertainment. Kill almost their study time with mobile legend, even in academic sphere or classroom. Like an expired kid group, it's a jokes but reality too. Can't free from their slavery.

Many value and positive thing born while students disseminate and defense their argument on this issue. What a constructive discussion. Talk about dilemmatic theme in contemporary culture, it's something old view. When even government can't emphasize their act and decision about online game. Yet the student decide, with the pure reason consideration and the MEANS OF THE TIME they affirm that,

Today in digital native, function and of Senculum represent in public sphere, a constellation of communicative spaces in society that permit the circulation of information, ideas, debates – ideally in an unfettered manner – and also the formation of political will. And computer represent it on digital society.

In Jennings and Zeitner (2003), the internet have had positive effects on several indicators of political participation. And Shah, et al.(2005), the role of the internet in political participation is twofold; (1) it is a reliable and convenient source of political information; and (2) the internet is a sphere for public expression of political sentiments and opinion.

Graham Murdock on Citizens, consumers, and public culture, shouted (Computer evolution provoke) the growth of the modern communications system in today societies has been inextricably linked to both the rise of mass democracy and the growth of mass consumption. From the outset, however, commentators of a variety political hues have pointed to the contradictory relations between capitalist economics and liberal democratic politics, consumerism and citizenship. As the major vehicle for the mass advertising that promoted the new consumer system and the central forum for organizing political information and debate in the emerging liberal democratic system based on universal suffrage the communication system was caught in the center of this tension.
